BASQUIAT

This art owner has an interest in the sale of this artwork.

This art piece (purportedly by Jean-Michel Basquiat) is available. The seller suggests a price of about $50 million, but is open to strong offers. This work of art is vaulted in a secure storage facility in NYC (New York City), lacks formal SKR, measurements approximating 69” by 72”.

This artwork is not cited in this artist’s catalogue, as it has been in storage for many years and has not been circulated.

With a strong preliminary bid or LOI (letter of interest), additional details can be provided.

About the artist, Wikpedia states:

"Jean-Michel Basquiat (September 22, 1960 – August 12, 1988) was an American artist who rose to success during the 1980s as part of the Neo-expressionism movement.

Basquiat first achieved notoriety in the late 1970s as part of the graffiti duo SAMO, alongside Al Diaz, writing enigmatic epigrams all over Manhattan, particularly in the cultural hotbed of the Lower East Side where rap, punk, and street art coalesced into early hip-hop music culture. By the early 1980s, his paintings were being exhibited in galleries and museums internationally. At 21, Basquiat became the youngest artist to ever take part in Documenta in Kassel, Germany. At 22, he was one of the youngest to exhibit at the Whitney Biennial in New York. The Whitney Museum of American Art held a retrospective of his artwork in 1992.

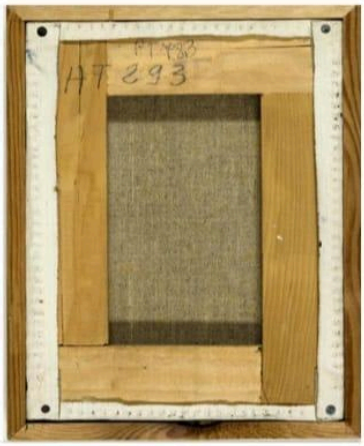

Basquiat's art focused on dichotomies such as wealth versus poverty, integration versus segregation, and inner versus outer experience. He appropriated poetry, drawing, and painting, married text and image, incorporating abstraction, figuration, and historical information mixed with contemporary critique. He used social commentary in his paintings as a tool for introspection and for identifying with his experiences in the black community, as well as attacks on power structures and systems of racism. His visual poetics were acutely political and direct in their criticism of colonialism and support for class struggle.

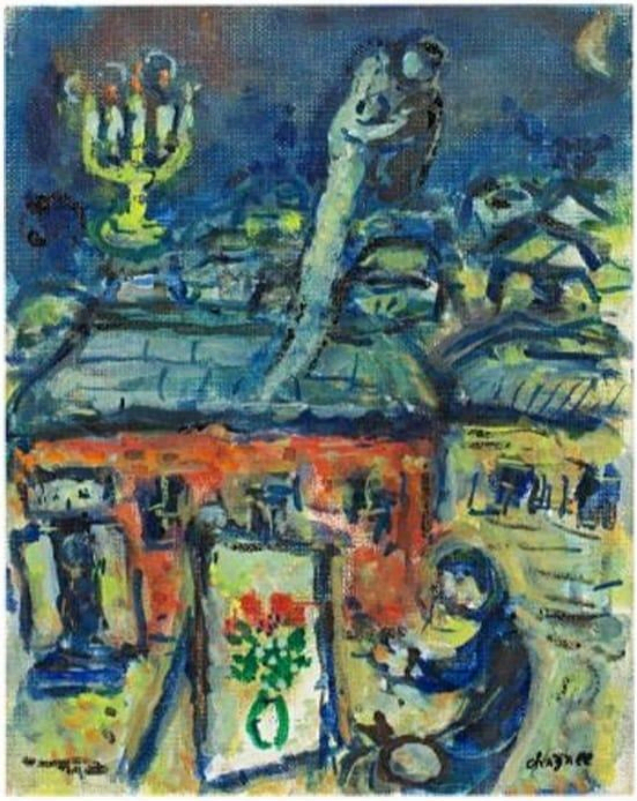

Since his death at the age of 27 in 1988, Basquiat's work has steadily increased in value. In 2017, Untitled, a 1982 painting depicting a black skull with red and yellow rivulets, sold for a record-breaking $110.5 million, becoming one of the most expensive paintings ever purchased."

About the artist, Wikpedia states:

"Marc Chagall (born Moishe Shagal; 6 July [O.S. 24 June] 1887 – 28 March 1985) was a Belarusian and French artist. An early modernist, he was associated with the École de Paris as well as several major artistic styles and created works in a wide range of artistic formats, including painting, drawings, book illustrations, stained glass, stage sets, ceramics, tapestries and fine art prints.

Chagall was born in 1887, into a Jewish family near Vitebsk, today in Belarus, but at that time in the Pale of Settlement of the Russian Empire. Before World War I, he travelled between Saint Petersburg, Paris, and Berlin. During that period, he created his own mixture and style of modern art, based on his ideas of Eastern European and Jewish folklore. He spent the wartime years in his native Belarus, becoming one of the country's most distinguished artists and a member of the modernist avant-garde, founding the Vitebsk Arts College. He later worked in and near Moscow in difficult conditions during hard times in Russia following the Bolshevik Revolution, before leaving again for Paris in 1923. During World War II, he escaped occupied France to the United States, where he lived in New York City for seven years before returning to France in 1948.

Art critic Robert Hughes referred to Chagall as "the quintessential Jewish artist of the twentieth century". According to art historian Michael J. Lewis, Chagall was considered to be "the last survivor of the first generation of European modernists". For decades, he "had also been respected as the world's pre-eminent Jewish artist". Using the medium of stained glass, he produced windows for the cathedrals of Reims and Metz as well as the Fraumünster in Zürich, windows for the UN and the Art Institute of Chicago and the Jerusalem Windows in Israel. He also did large-scale paintings, including part of the ceiling of the Paris Opéra.

He had two basic reputations, writes Lewis: as a pioneer of modernism and as a major Jewish artist. He experienced modernism's "golden age" in Paris, where "he synthesized the art forms of Cubism, Symbolism, and Fauvism, and the influence of Fauvism gave rise to Surrealism". Yet throughout these phases of his style "he remained most emphatically a Jewish artist, whose work was one long dreamy reverie of life in his native village of Vitebsk." "When Matisse dies", Pablo Picasso remarked in the 1950s, "Chagall will be the only painter left who understands what colour really is"."

EDWARD HOPPER

Edward Hopper's "STUDY FOR SUMMER EVENING" the master painting was completed in 1947 A.D., hand painted oil on canvas, original realist painting, 16 inches by 14 inches.

This piece – an initial version of the final work – suggested to be authentic with careful signature validation and brushstroke comparisons, is available for sale. Edward Hopper was also noted as the "KING OF REALISM," the final rendition includes a man and a woman, depicted in similar background. Current location of the art is in the Caribbean.

The Whitney Museum received the majority of Hopper's numerous works, and this piece can be considered as "extremely rare" as only one of few in private collections, with the record among sales for this artist from a private collection recorded at $91,875,000 USD.

With a strong LOI or bid, further details can be provided.

DANIEL RIDGWAY KNIGHT

This artwork is suggested to be the original study en plein air study painting for Hailing the Ferry by Daniel Ridgway Knight, circa 1888 or earlier. With observed date of "188" the frame covers the last number. This study was then painted again in a final version with numerous color changes and slight variants, typical for artists who often compose the same work on multiple occasions with slight changes.

For sale, valuation target of about $500,000.

The owner suggests that this study as a prelude to the extremely valuable final larger version and is an important missing link that provided guidance to the final version via this initial draft. The owner has meticulously worked to document the authenticity of this piece. Due its age – circa 1870 – the oil paint is acknowledged to be in poor condition.

Further details are available with serious expression of interest or preliminary letter of intent or interest.

V)…B. CLAUDE MONET, UNTITLED

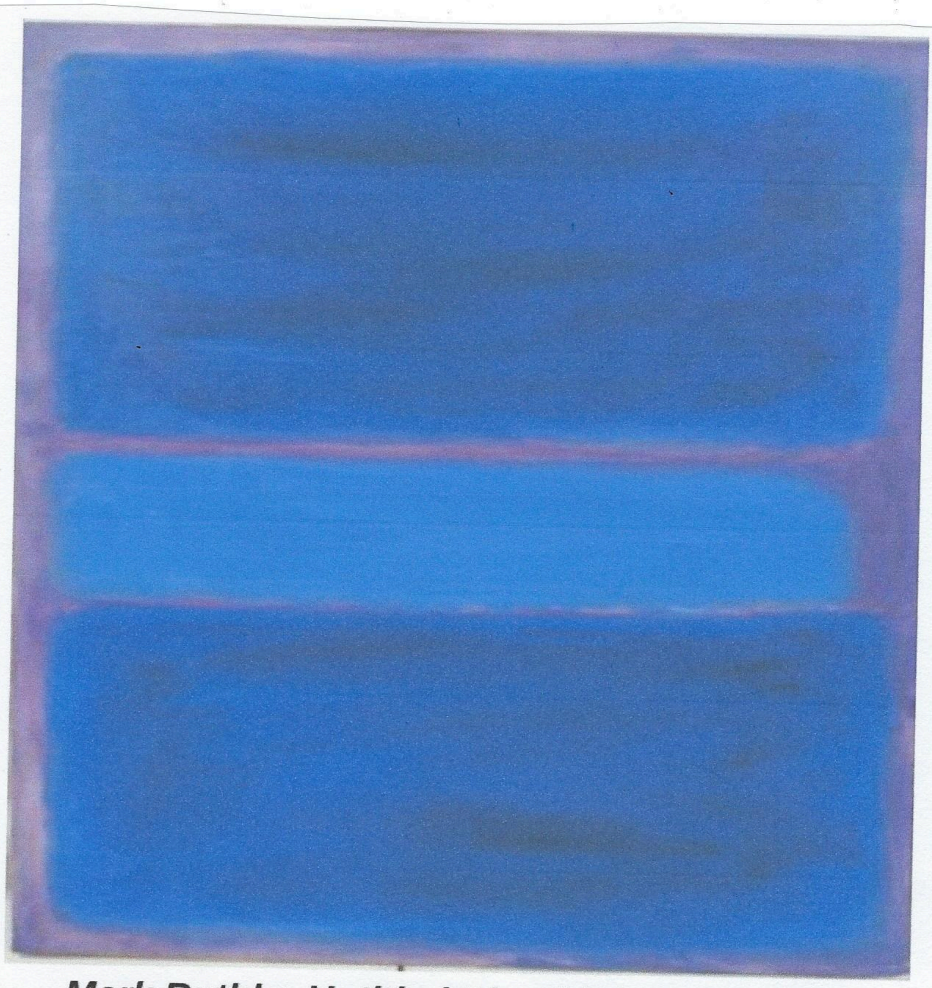

I just sit and look at this beautiful art…the tranquility and serenity are mesmerizing. Oscar-Claude Monet was a French painter and founder of impressionism painting who is seen as a key precursor to modernism, especially in his attempts to paint nature as he perceived it (Wikpedia).

Monet's ambition to document the French countryside led to a method of painting the same scene many times to capture the changing of light and the passing of the seasons. Frequently exhibited and successful during his lifetime, Monet's fame and popularity soared in the second half of the 20th century when he became one of the world's most famous painters and a source of inspiration for a burgeoning group of artists.

This art owner has not researched this piece for valuation, so we leave it up to collectors and experts to provide guidance leading to a suitable strike price.

MARK ROTHKO: VI B)….WHITE OVER RED

Master Painting Completed 1949 A.D
Hand painted Oil Painting on Canvas
An Original Abstract Expressionist Painting
20th century Latvian American Artist Mark Rothko 1903 - 1970 A.D.

MARK ROTHKO

One of the preeminent artists of his generation, Mark Rothko is closely identified with the New York school, a closely allied group of painters that emerged during the 1940s as a new stylistic voice in American art. During a career that spanned five decades, Rothko created a new and impassioned abstract painting style.

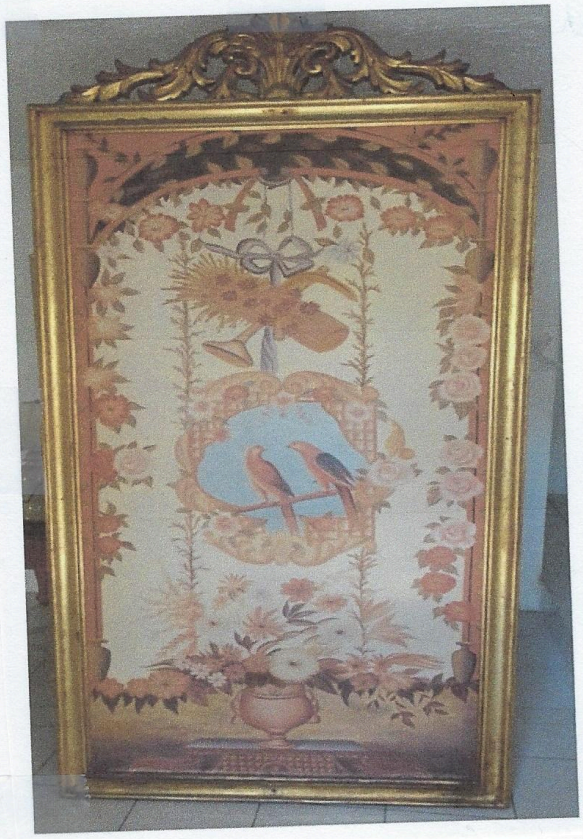

Rothko's works are characterized by rigorous attention to formal elements such as color, shape, balance, depth, composition, and scale. Bold color comparisons with contrasting colors are hallmarks of some of his works.

His rectangular classic abstract paintings are characterized by a simplified use of form, brilliant hues, and broad, thin washes of color.

In Rothko's mature or "classic" period (1951–1970), he consistently painted rectangular regions of color, intended as "dramas" to elicit an emotional response from the viewer (Wikpedia).

The two works depicted herein are aligned with his most recognized unique motif with strongest value.

Titled: "A Kingdom Gone Cause Pigeons Came" aka "Triumph of The Pigeoneers"

This large French watercolor is an extraordinary masterpiece, circa 1940's. This remarkable work of art is an unparalleled gem of both historic and artistic significance.

The painting beautifully captures two loving passenger pigeons, intricately detailed within a floral wreath design. This magnificent piece is rendered in the style of the 18th-century artist François Boucher, known for his Rococo mastery. The artist has skillfully employed fine watercolor on canvas, measuring an impressive 8 feet 1 inch tall by 3 feet 7 and a half inches wide. The painting is framed in a stunning gold wooden frame, enhancing its regal presence, and the color scheme matches close to the rear collection of 6 paintings that exist in the Tapestry Room in Newby Hall, Yorkshire England, the painting for sale is the 7th in the world and truly a rare art.

The historical context of this painting adds to its allure value. Once belonging to a member of the British Royal Family. It was given as a gift to US General George Catlett Marshall in 1953. This prestigious gift was a token of gratitude for his bravery and significant contributions during World War II. The painting's subject delves into the history of the French Pigeoneers of the 1700s, tens of thousands of pigeoneers or pigeon towers were all over the country of France. There was no doubt that the number of pigeons had become a matter of great public concern. These pigeons were bred by the millions and would eat all the crops and seeds that the farmers had which were meant to be grown harvested and sold to the citizens of the country for their survival. French law back then limited the freedom to build pigeoneers but confusingly there were as many different sets of rules as there were provinces. For example in Provence France, anyone was permitted to build pigeon towers freely, but in other parts of France only the King himself could grant permission to build a pigeon tower and then, only to those who had an estate of at least 60 hectares When it came to pigeons on the ground the entire country of France had millions of passenger pigeons on the ground so many that the Kingdom of France experienced a 100 year-long pigeon problem. No matter how many times the local farmers and citizens complained to the Nobles their cries all fell on deaf ears. Most of the pigeoneers were owned by the Nobles and it was the Nobles themselves who administered the law. It wasn't until the mid-18th century when a foreign Shipowner from Marseille named Georges Roux founded the town in Var, France, and built a 22-meter-high 12-meter-wide pigeon tower and brought in an additional 32,000 pigeons. The citizens had enough and went mad, now armed with their Saber swords they stormed up and the French Revolution began. Wars had broken out on the streets of Paris, leading to a meeting held at the Palace of Versailles. There the citizens plead their list of demands to their King and Government, first on the list was the removal of the then feudal system, and 2nd was the pigeoneers. The exclusive right to maintain pigeon towers was abolished, pigeons were ordered to be confined at all times, and during such time they were marked as game and every one man, woman boy, and girl had the right to kill them upon being on their land. Passenger pigeons were murdered by the millions and the same happened in the west in the country of the United States of America.

By the beginning of the 20th century or early 1900s, approximately 4 Billion passenger pigeons had died in the United States of America alone. By the beginning of 1910, only 3 passenger pigeons remained in the entire world and they were in the United States of America. By the middle of 1910 one of the males had died. Now in a last attempt to finally breed the passenger pigeon which failed, the last male died later on in 1910. The female was then named Martha and became an extremely popular celebrity all over the United States of America, and in 1914 Martha died.

This painting shows the last two love birds gazing into each other's eyes as they die as a reminder that death comes to us all. Coupled with the presence of the hanging Saber sword, and French buisine trumpet a reminder of the wars and lives lost on the streets of Paris, the falling thistle is also a reminder of the fallen Kingdom of France now gone forever. All arched with a floral decorative design surrounding the scene adding an exquisite touch of elegance and refinement in the royal rococo style.

"A Kingdom Gone Cause Pigeons Came also known as Triumph of The Pigeoneers," poetically captures the essence of this historical journey. The meticulous detail and profound storytelling make this painting not only a visual masterpiece but also a conversation piece that bridges the past and present together.

This is a rare opportunity to own a piece of art history that is steeped in royal heritage and historical significance.

Priced at only $2,000,000 USD, this exceptional painting is available for sale.
